NOBBY GETS A NEW SET OF WHEELS

1. What a rum-pus in Toytown! Nobby's little yellow car was roaring the streets without a driver! Everyone ran to get out of the way.

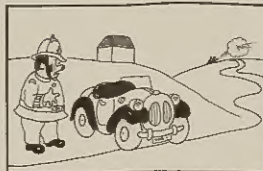

2. "What's going on?" asked P.C. Pop. "I'm looking for Nobby!" hooted the car. "He hasn't taken me out of the garage for weeks!"

3. Suddenly the yellow car spun around as a strange figure roared past at great speed. It was Nobby on a big, fast motorcycle!

4. He pulled up outside the house of Bixi, the fashionable doll who'd moved into Toytown recently. "Let's split and find some fun, baby!" said Nobby.

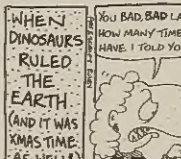

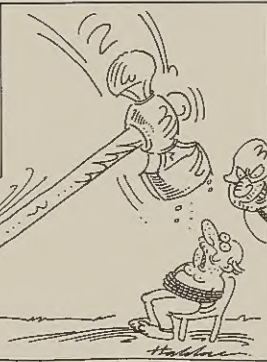

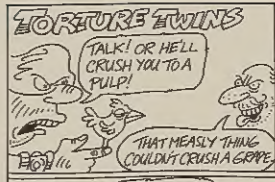

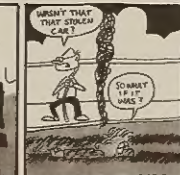

5. The yellow car honked sadly. "You can't blame him for wanting to get grown-up," said P.C. Pop. "After all, he is about forty years old!"

6. But their ride wasn't enjoyable! Nobby had to keep stopping to wind up the bike! "That's the last time I buy from the Toytown garage!" signed Nobby.

HENRY the WONDER DOG

DOCTOR JEKYL'S EXPERIMENT

inspired by the great Soviet songwriters Lenin and McCartney, and in the new spirit of glasnost, perestroika and the fun-loving dictatorship of the proletariat, the Soviet leader broadcasts to the world his plea for the reform of corrupt elements of government and an end to big fiances and fresh cabbage for backsliding bureaucratic administrators.

-OR-

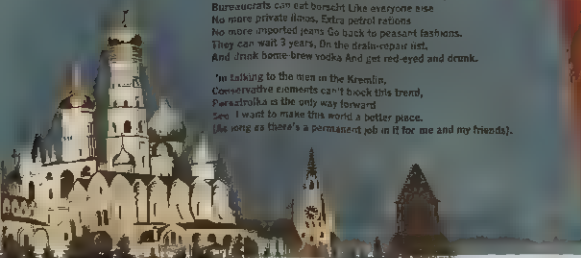

"The Men in the Kremlin" by Mikhail Jacksonov

I'm starting with the men in the Kremlin,
I'm asking them to change the ways
I'm asking them to give up corruption
If they want to make the world a better place,
Take a look at themselves and make a change.

Let's stop elitist shops With well-stocked shelves,
Bureaucrats can eat borscht like everyone else
No more private diners, End the petrol rations
No more imported jeans Go back to peasant fashions.
They can wait 3 years, On the drain-repair list,
And drink home-brew vodka And get red-eyed and drunk.

'm talking to the men in the Kremlin,
Conservative elements can't block this trend,
Perestroika is the only way forward
See, I want to make this world a better place.
(the song as there's a permanent job in it for me and my friends).

The Ballad of ROBBING HOOD

In Merry, the English folk were oppressed,
For Richard the King had gone off on a crusade.
He'd left his crown brother-in-charge on the land,
And John was a tyrant who ruled with cruel hand.

But one day, as he was in the wood,
A king he did see, all in a crowd.
'Twas Robbing Hood, a merry crew,
Whom really and truly he took.

And also their pants, arrows and bows,
The kids from their heads and the shirts from their chests
To seek from him, he said to give to the poor
Who lived in the forest as up at the door.

For he was a good man, a merry man,
But now he was a king, a crown on his head.
Mad Marston put his bow in a hand,
And Robb Hood, where he saw the deed.

But a arrow flew high and a shot was heard
And Robb Hood, where he saw the deed.

King John heard the news as he stood in the hall
And said, "That old Hood and his band."

So he said, "I will be a king, a crown on my head,
And Robb Hood, where he saw the deed."

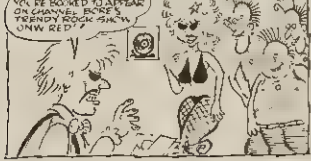

And Robb Hood, where he saw the deed.

THE MINISTRY OF DEFENCE

PRESENT

TIPS FOR THE YAFER

IN THE EVENT OF AN ALL-OUT NUCLEAR WAR

● CANCEL THE MILK AND NEWSPAPER DELIVERIES

It really isn't fair on poor old M. Kie if he has to deliver to ALL the houses the morning after the holocaust. One less on his list is something he's bound to appreciate.

● LOCK ALL DOORS AND WINDOWS

We don't want people just wandering in and seeing the curtains in such a dreadful state of decay.

● DISCONNECT ALL ELECTRICAL APPLIANCES BEFORE THE BLAST

One handy hint, however, is to keep the video switched on so you can record all the programmes you'll miss while you're in the shelter.

● PAINT ALL THE WINDOWS WHITE TO DEFLECT HEAT

There is an awful lot of heat generated by a nuclear explosion, so it's a good idea to cover up your petunias and daffodils, too — or they might get a bit shrivelled!

1. Remove 3 inner doors and lean them against a convenient wall. (Don't forget to sand down the edges, or you may tear the wallpaper.)

2. Place several cushions against the doors, and paint the doors white.

NB. It is best not to use glass-paneled doors, as they tend to smash or melt and kill you.

Your local Oxfam shop may have some old cushions — why not help charity as you protect yourself?

3. Personalise the shelter. Why not add a little window box and some curtains?

DAVID SMELLAMY'S WORLD OF NATURE

This month: "Masters of Disguise"

Greetings, nature-lovers! Did you know that many creatures throughout the world have perfected the art of camouflage to an incredible degree? I present, on this page, a round-up of some of these wonders of the natural world...

1] Here we see the tree-dwelling CHAMELEO, which has cleverly disguised itself as a rubber lizard in order to avoid small boys trying to pull its legs off.

4] Even the humble Swedish COMMON OR GARDEN HOUSE-MOUSE has adapted to the need for camouflage. Here we see it mimicking a tin of baked beans in order to remain undetected as it raids a pantry.

2] The TWANSLUCENT TWOPICAL TIDDLERFISH can turn its flesh totally transparent to fool predators into thinking they've eaten it already.

5] Here, the BOLIVIAN GIANT LEECH disguises itself as Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II in order to get into a Royal Variety Performance featuring Des O'Connor (a great favourite among music-loving Bolivian Leeches). Another interesting fact about the species is that they are all totally tone-deaf.

3] The PEWEEVIAN TWIT-SPAWYOW has the remarkable ability to imitate its rivals for the mastery of the air. Here it is cunningly disguised as Lithuanian Airways flight BC104 from Heathrow.

6] Here we see a pathetic attempt at disguise by PIGGUS VINDICULOUS (David Smellamy, to give him his non-scientific name). This failed attempt to escape the wrath of a predator [me] happened after Smellamy turned in a set of stupid photos, claiming they were an educational natural history feature. Smellamy's disguise abilities are improving — in fact, after I got my trotters on him, he was unrecognisable!
